11.3 In determining whether or not a vehicle should be replaced, the Municipal Fleet Officer shall take the following guidelines into account:
11.3.1 Both time and distance are often used to determine the need to replace vehicles, but the most accurate factor to be used is vehicle cost. There are two elements for vehicle cost namely the capital purchase of the vehicle and the running cost per kilometer. The best time to replace a vehicle is at the point at which the cost per kilometer is at the lowest.
11.3.2 The best simplest method to allocate capital cost is to split the cost of replacing the vehicle over the number of kilometers traveled. Conversely the running cost per kilometer will increase as more kilometers are traveled and more complex maintenance is required. It is possible to set an average of life span of a vehicle by using the management information to determine the point at which the cost per kilometer is at the lowest.
11.3.3 The vehicle should be replaced if the running cost per kilometer of the old vehicle is higher than the full cost per kilometer of the new vehicle.

11.3.4 Running cost per kilometer of the old vehicle is calculated by adding fuel cost per kilometer and the maintenance cost per kilometer. These will be both available from the vehicle's file and the monthly fleet report form and should be averaged over a three to six months period. The overall cost per kilometer of a new vehicle can be calculated by taking the capital cost per kilometer and adding this to the expected running cost per kilometer. The expected life of the vehicle can be estimated using management data for vehicle of given type and the expected running cost can also be taken from current data for vehicles of this type.
